pertaining to the Glacial Period of Finance, when Charles W. wise the National Bank of North America, as the market place of Ice Trust Judge Hough resumed the joint trial of Morse and his Wall Street understudy, Alfred H. Curtis, on the charge of violating the Government Banking law.

Mr. Stimson started the day's proceedings by calling to the stand Wesley M. Oler, the president of Morse's American Ice Company since 1904. Oler. tall, angular and cold looking, as befitting his calling, told Assistant District-Attorney Wise, who conducted the Dealings with Morse.

"What dealings, if any, did you have with Mr. Morse in 1906?" asked Wise.

"On Jan. 15 of that year," said Mr. Oler, "I asked Mr. Morse if he would carry 1,000 shares of Ice securities for me. He bought it for me at 43 1-2 and I signed a note at the National Bank of North America for $43,500, as a loan with which to pay for it. The stock itself was deposited as collateral. The deal was closed out in August at a good profit, the proceeds being credited on a debt of $30,000 which I aiready owed the bank, and reducing the amound of my indebtedness to about $500,000.

"Later Mr. Morse wanted me to take 2,000 shares of Ice at 71, telling me it would go much higher. I objected because I was just getting out of debt, but he said he couldn't help me to Judge ruled it out.

by Mr. Stimson. Moxey produced the accounts of John Wallace & Co., brokers, with Morse in the years 1906 and 1907.

The account showed that John F. Carrollis purchase of Ice in the successful first pool was guaranteed by Morse. It was in the second pool, which Morse did not guarantee, that Carroll, along with all the rest of the syndicate, got so badly gaffed. Wallace & Co. had also been instructed to guarantee the Charles F. Barney purchase in the first pool.

Q. Did Ice advance after you bought the second lot? A. It went above 90, When it reached 90 I told Mr. Morse I wanted to sell and pay back my loan. He wouldn't consent. He said he was going to hold that stock until it touched 110.

Q. Did you put up 500 shares of Baltimore Electric Power as additional collateral? A. No. I owned no Baltimore Electric Power as additional collateral? A. No. I owned no Baltimore Electric Power. I can't recall why or how my Ice stock came to be backed up with the Baltimore Power.

"Did you ever pay that note of $142,000?" asked Wise.

"At the time of these transactions which you have described, what saiary were you getting?" asked Mr. Wallace MacFariane, personally representing Morse.

"I was getting $21,000 a rear," said Mr. Oler with a smile in which modesty seemed gently struggling with pride for the ascendancy. "I had been getting Q. Were you under any physical restraint which kept you from closing out of them evidently noticed us at the one window, for he raised his revolver and fired a shot. We saw the flash and heard the report. I think he fired in the air to frighten us. "Mr. March ran to the telephone, but could get no reply when he lifted the rred to us that the wires might have been cut, and we soon found that this was true. By the time we had fixed up a connection the burglars were well out of the way. "There is little police protection in our neighborhood, but we feel that the robbery was quite daring-more like Arizona than New Jersey. The burglars entered without much trouble through a window on the ground floor. I think they wore rubber shoes, because they made very little noise as they walked. "The sound of the revolver shot echoed all about the neighborhood, but apparently no one was aroused. My son was awakened, but he thought it was some campaign celebrator shooting a gun on his way home. He did not know of the burglary until this morning, and the maids were not awakened

Many Diamonds Stolen.

Many Diamonds Stolen.

Mrs. March refused to put any valuation upon the jewelry, but the police report it to be worth several thousand dollars. It included a fine collection of diamonds. The thieves took in addition some silverware and trinkets from the dining room sideboard. Mrs. March says that this part of the loot was not particularly valuable, but the police report makes it worth $1,200.

When the belated telephone message from the March home reached Police Headquarters a patrol wagon with seven policemen aboard was raced to the scene of the burglary. The policemen wanted to search the house, but Mr. and Mrs. March, knowing that the thieves were well out of the way, refused to permit it. Some of the officers took up the trail, and claim to have pursued the burglars to Newark.

There have been close to a dozen robberies in the Oranges in the past three weeks. The burglars have picked out the homes of wealthy men, and have realized heavily upon their operations. There is no doubt that the men who robbed Mr. and Mrs. March comprise the gang that has committed all the burglaries, because other victims have reported that they were robbed by three masked men.
